Indian and Northern Affairs Canada (INAC) supports Aboriginal people (First Nations, Inuit, Métis) and Northerners in their efforts to: improve social well-being and economic prosperity; develop healthier, more sustainable communities; and participate more fully in Canada's political, social and economic development-to benefit all Canadians. INAC is one of the federal government departments responsible for meeting the Government of Canada's obligations and commitments to the First Nations, Inuit and Métis, and for fulfilling the federal constitutional responsibilities in the North. INAC's responsibilities are largely determined by numerous statutes, negotiated agreements and relevant legal decisions. Most of the Department's programs, representing a majority of its spending -are delivered through partnerships with Aboriginal communities and federal-provincial or federal territorial agreements. INAC also works with urban Aboriginal people, Métis and Non-Status Indians (many of whom live in rural area) through the Office of the Federal Interlocutor.

The ROHCG is a health care organization responsible for the specialized mental health care needs of Eastern Ontario, from Cornwall to Deep River. Although we have two centers-the Royal Ottawa Mental Health Center and the Brockville Mental Health Center-we also run a number of satellite programs, which makes us the largest provider of community-based mental health services in our region. In addition to our two mental health centers, we also administer the province's first long term care facility for persons living with a stable mental health diagnosis, and in need of ongoing support. On the Brockville campus, we provide health care delivery in the province's first Secure treatment Unit for Ontario correctional inmates suffering from serious mental illness. We house the University of Ottawa Institute for Mental Health Research, which is now the third largest mental health institute in the country. We also train the health care professionals of tomorrow through our academic affiliation with the various health disciplines at University of Ottawa and Carleton University.
